those. But I think that was the outstanding thrill of my whole trip.

About 1920 there was a boat called the Cape Cod that brought passengers from Boston to Provincetown. On this boat was a tall, distinguished gentleman with grey hair who played the piano and sang songs to entertain the people. He wrote a song about Provincetown and it went along like this:

"Take a sail down Cape Cod Bay, down to Provincetown,

Take a sail down the bay on a bright pleasant day, down to Provincetown,

There's always a jolly good crowd coming back, as the sun goes down,

It's the best place to go, as you all soon will know, and it's Pro-vince-town."

How's that?
