is dedicated to all those who have set out in their boats in the quest of a catch. Hardy and intrepid, they have endured the rigors that are part and parcel of a seafarers life.

Yet I cannot tarry longer.

The sea that calls all things unto her calls me, and I must embark.

For to stay, though the hours burn in the night, is to freeze and crystallize and be bound in a mold.

Fain would I take with me all that is here.

But how shall I?

A voice cannot carry the tongue and the lips that gave it wings.

Alone must it seek the ether.

And alone and without his nest shall the eagle fly across the sun.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts

A Proclamation

By His Excellency

GOVERNOR WILLIAM F. WELD

1997

WHEREAS: Massachusetts history has been shaped by many explorers and settlers from Portugal who established homes in the Commonwealth and helped develop the commercial fishing and whaling industries; and

WHEREAS: Descendants of these early settlers have contributed significantly to the Commonwealth's economy and culture, applying highly developed skills in navigation, shipbuilding, the literary and culturary arts, and music; and

WHEREAS: Many Portuguese immigrants have become prominent figures in local and national history, including John

Philip Sousa, John Dos Passos, and Umberto Cardinal Medeiros; and

WHEREAS: People of Portuguese heritage continue to be a vital part of the Commonwealth's rich diversity;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, WILLIAM F. WELD, Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, do hereby proclaim June 1997, to be and urge all the citizens of the Commonwealth to take cognizance of this event and participate fittingly in its observance.

Given at the Executive Chamber in Boston, this thirtieth day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and ninety-seven, and of the Independence of the United States of America, the two hundred and twenty-first.

In the early days and for the majority of the fifty years, this celebration was organized and executed by the fishing fleet. Unfortunately, with the decline of our fleet and the transformation of the fishing industry in general, the number of participating boats has dwindled.

Approximately five years ago, the Blessing was in danger of extinction. If not for the hard work of Joy McNulty, Steve Roderick and the entire McNulty family, this celebration would have died and would not have reached its golden anniversary.

This year's Blessing is enhanced by the First Annual Provincetown Portuguese Festival—a four day celebration of the Portuguese heritage of the town. We have put together a full calendar of fun, exciting and inspirational events to honor the Portuguese fishermen and their families that were for so many years the economic, social and cultural backbone of the town.

We welcome all of our guests and hope you will enjoy the festivities as well as learn something about the Portuguese of Provincetown and how their hard work and dedication to their vocation of fishing have shaped this town and made us what we are today.

We, the people of Provincetown, thank the fishermen for all their past efforts and vow never to let the memory of the Provincetown Portuguese or the fishing dragger industry be forgotten. Enjoy your stay, have fun and please remember to respect the town and its people.

Warmest regards,

History of the Blessing of the Fleet

by Betty Costa

It has been said that there are no atheists in foxholes. Perhaps the same could be said of fishermen, alone or with a small crew in the middle of the ocean. With no land in sight, a sudden squall, a leak or fire, or the loss of radio contact can result in a feeling of utter helplessness. It is no exaggeration to label fishing as hazardous. This, then, was ample reason for the early fishermen to invoke the blessing of God upon their endeavors.

With origins in Portugal, the solemn rite is often coupled with a celebration of the Portuguese heritage. The Blessing of the Fleet is a time of celebration and reflection.

The festivities are not always the same. Each locality is apt to have a different agenda. In Viana Do Costelo, in the Portuguese Province of Minho, the Blessing is preceded by a three day festival. There are daily parades, each with a different theme. The first day showcases artisans and their wares, and is whimsical in nature. A biblical theme is the motif for the second day, and on the third, the history of relations between Spain and Portugal is spotlighted. On each of the three evenings, there are impressive displays of fireworks. At midnight on the third day, the road from the church to the pier is closed to traffic. Throughout the night, following an age old custom, a carpet is laid down. Using colored sawdust in a myriad of colors and patterns, the road on which the procession will proceed, is decorated. It is a strikingly beautiful sight.

Having witnessed the festivities in Gloucester with Domingo and Edith Godinho, Arthur Bragg Silva was so impressed that he vowed to bring the custom to Provincetown. He took notes during a conversation with conversation with the Gloucester chairman and brought his information home to share with the local fishermen. They were quick to embrace the idea.

Serving on the first committee with Mr. Silva were fishermen Domingo Godinho, Salvador Vasques, Frances Segura, Louis and Fred Salvador, Joseph Roderick, Joseph Lisbon, Manuel Henrique, Manuel Macara and George Adams, with Frank Taves and Ernest Carreiro as volunteers. There men were a part of the blessing for many years. Willing workers, they were joined by others as the years went by.

Anyone who has been involved in the planning for this annual event will attest to the large amount of work that goes into it. Through the years, volunteers have worked tirelessly to collect ads, contact marching bands, arrange childrens' games and plan the different events that have been a part of the festivities. Different highlights such as Arts and Crafts Fairs, Wind-surfing Regattas, softball games, net mending and wire splicing contests, senior dances and fishermen's quahog parties are but a few of these.

For many years, the statue of St. Peter has been lovingly decorated by Florence Menangas, whose late husband Tony was one of the men who carried the statue in the procession. Although in some countries St. Anthony is honored, in Provincetown the fishermen revere the patron saint of the local church, who was also a fisherman.

On the day of the blessing, the men of the fleet marched to the church, sometimes carrying banners with the names of their boats. The mass was celebrated by the Bishop, with fishermen acting as lectors reading from the scriptures and also as alter servers. Often priests who

The wives and families spent days planning and preparing food for the parties that followed the blessing. The boats had been cleaned, painted and decorated with flags and banners and were a colorful sight as they anchored off Long Point.

There have been many somber moments as the years have gone by. Giants of the industry and beloved priests are no longer with us. Three vessels, the Patricia Marie, the Cap'n Bill, and the Victory II sank with the loss of all crew members. These tragedies rocked this entire community and the loss is still felt. The annual Blessing has involved

The annual Blessing has involved all segments of the community. Shops have decorated their windows and it has been the occasion for cookouts and beach parties.

Frequently in evidence at some of the related festivities was the Linguica Bank. Clad in embroidered red vests, these men entertained tirelessly. With Frank Aresta on the concertina, Anthony Russell on the mandolin and loring Russell on the guitar, this group was a hit at many gatherings. Jack Edwards often joined them on the bass fiddle.

Throughout the years, the roster of fishermen has changed, as have types of fish and the methods of fishing. Smaller crews have meant adapting the old ways. Once known as a whaling town, Provincetown is now known as the foremost place for whale watching. Trap fishing is a thing of the past. As fishing stocks have dwindled, regulations have multiplied. Some of these, while meant to preserve and nurture future catches, are especially hard on the small wooden boats that make up most of the Provincetown fleet. Weather is a constant factor and quotas seem unfair to some. For a number of years, the industry has been struggling to survive. Aquaculture and fish farming are possible ways to satisfy the market for seafood.

It is the fervent hope of all involved in the 1997 Blessing of the Fleet, that this year will mark a turning point in the fishing industry.

With gratitude to all those whose lives and work have become our seafaring heritage.

The next big expedition was almost 20 years later, from 1519-1521, when Ferdinand Magellan captained the first ship to circumnavigate the globe. On this trip, Magellan came across a vast ocean that was as yet uncharted, and named it the Pacific Ocean.

The open-mindedness and endless curiosity of the Portuguese brought them to all ends of the globe. Names like Dias, da Gama, Côrte Real, and Magellan all bring Portugal a well-deserved sense of pride about their expansion of the known world and their rich seafaring heritage.

Dory Fishermen

by Molly Benjamin

ver the years, two kinds of fishing dominated the dory-fishing scene: One style operated right out of Provincetown Harbor, from where folks would think nothing of rowing out to, say, Wood End, catch a boatload of, say, codfish, and after that, row home.

The other form of dory-fishing meant taking your Provincetown-they'd say. From there, it wasn't a long haul before they'd be into the mackerel, or later in the year, cod. Down would go the hooks if they were going jigging, or out would run the trawl.

A trawl, for the un-initiated, is a long line with leaders and baited hooks tied on about every six feet. Anchors are set at both ends of the line, as is a pick-up buoy. Sometimes the fishing was so good that as soon as the gear was set, the dorvmen would row back to the beginning and start hauling. Most of the time, two fellows would work together, one pulling the line, the other unhooking the fish.

built dories with you to fish someplace else. They'd load a dozen or so aboard a bigger ship, sail out to Georges or the Grand Banks, anchor, then, almost like dropping off a gang of kids from a school bus, send all the dories out to fishing.

Dories are fairly easily made, allpurpose boats. You can ride out a hurricane in them. Not surprisingly, they have been used, over the years, in a number of ways.

Some of the gang kept their dories on the beach at Long Point. Put them a lot closer to the fish,

According to several Provincetown old-timers, longlining changed radically when the Portuguese arrived. The old way of doing things was to just flake down the line in the bottom of the dory, then take the whole mess home to re-bait and re-arrange. (You can imagine that this kind of rig had to be carefully adjusted so it would run out nicely instead of having all those hooks snarling up.)

The Portuguese, bless their souls, had a trick of re-coiling the line in a round tub, putting each hook onto the lip of the tub—in order, of course. The introduction of the tub-reflected today when we call this kind of fishing "tub trawling" was a technological revolution. It is also said that at one time, some of the Provincetown Portuguese fellows would keep a dory in Chatham in order to fish out of that harbor at certain times of the year. But after the Provincetown gang taught the Chatham gang how to recoil the line in a tub as they went along, they were booted out of town. No fishermen much likes competition, especially competition that beats the oilskins off you.

Today we have one homeboy doryman by the name of Edgar Ritter. Take a look later this week, you'll likely see him rowing all over Provincetown Harbor handling for the mighty fluke. Ritter's not the only person to handline for fluke of a summer, but he's the one guy out there using an ever sea-kindly, orange dory.

After awhile, the dories were armed with engines—one-lungers, the first were called, for their one piston. This allowed the gang to go a little farther from shore and have an easier time of it when the wind kicked up on the way home.

Dories were much in use during the days of what are called the Salt-Bankers, big sailing ships that would take a big crews to Georges, the Grand, and other fishy underwater hotels. There, the big ship would anchor and the two-man crews would hoist over their dories—and themselves—and go trawling.

Stories are told in our coffee shops today of how dories figured big for getting some of today's well-known families to Provincetown. Employed as dorymen on a Portuguese Grand Banker, some dorymen literally jumped ship in Gloucester or Portland, Maine, and swam to shore.

Recently retired dragger captain Arthur Reis says his grandfather was one of those swimmers.. "Everybody was starving in Portugal," he said, "so they all wanted to live here. A fleet of Portuguese Grand Bankers were anchored in Gloucester Harbor. My grandfather took off all his clothes. Being all he had, he wanted to take care of them. He put them in a small canvas bag covered in grease (to keep them dry), jumped over and swam ashore."

Presumably, there was no National Seashore ranger awaiting shoreside, ticket book in hand as his grandfather emerged jack-naked from the water. We don't exactly know how the senior Mr. Reis got from there to here, but could be, he rowed.

Not every doryman who fished the Grand Banks from a mother ship came home. Seas have a way of rising awfully quick, but out there, the biggest killer was fog. Boats of the day carried conch horns that would be blown trying to find each other; with this technology, it sometimes happened 21 that the dory got separated from the bigger boat, and was lost.

Probably the most famous doryman of all is Gloucester's Howard Blackburn, who with a fishing buddy found himself in just such a predicament one foggy day on Georges. No way could they find their ship. The snow began to fall, blinding them even further. Howard stayed at the oars and pulled for home; after awhile, he realized his hands were freezing in place. Seeing as he had little choice in the matter, he let them.

Howard's buddy died before they got there, but Blackburn rowed from Georges Bank to Gloucester. He lost his hands to frostbite, and later gained another notoriety for sailing the world single-handed. But that's another tale.

In his immortal "Provincetown Seafood Cookbook," the legendary Howard Mitcham tells the story of Frank Cook, Provincetown's entry into the doryman's piscatorial hall of fame. Though most fishermen were working from bigger boats by then, Frank was a bit stubborn and continued the hard life of the solitary doryman.

Working always from an open boat, dorymen like Cook were probably the source of the word "weather beaten." One day in 1890 he'd rowed out to Wood End and commenced jigging for cod. He hooked into a leviathan, which turned out to be a 270 pound halibut. The fish towed him around

DANCING LOBSTER
CAFE/TRATTORIA

463 COMMERCIAL STREET FLAGSHIP WHARF PROVINCETOWN, MA 02657 508 487 0900 like mad for a time. Somehow or another, the exhausted fisherman either got the equally exhausted monster into the boat, or as Mitcham figures it, conked it with an oar, tied it astern and rowed it home—another difficult feat, particularly if the weather had worked up a bit.

A now-famous photo of Cook, his line, and the huge fish caught with his bare hands was printed in newspapers all over the country. Mitcham says the first thing turn-of-the-century tourists would ask upon arrival was "Where's Mr. Cook who caught THE FISH."

Even dorymen had their day.

Our Best-Kept Secret

by George Duncan, with much help from Jackie Gleason who is related to the Corea family, and Margaret Roberts

n August 10, 1905 Captain William J. Corea took his family and friends sailing on his fishing sloop-boat Lear C. in Provincetown Harbor. The event was probably related to a visit by U.S. Naval vessels, one of which, painted white, is barely visible at the upper left corner of the photograph.

The Corea sisters became legendary schoolteachers here and I remember them well. They demanded attention and hard work from every student. (Today they would be the kinds of teachers who would be idolized by the current Chairman of the State Board of Education, Dr. John L. Silber). George, was Provincetown's first physician of Portuguese ancestry and a brilliant diagnostician.

The family is a good example of one of Provincetown's best-kept secrets: Most families with Portuguese surnames whose roots g back 4 or 5 generations are multiethnic. Capt. Corea's father came from the Azores but his mother was born in Ireland. His wife was a Scottish native of Cape Breton Island, Canada. If you know about the Azores' Islanders you are aware that they can be of varied origins: Celtic from the North of Portugal, Moorish from the South with strong lines of Flemish, French and Jewish forbears.

My grandmother's sister, Flora MacKenzie, was a friend of Mrs. Corea and also a native of Cape Breton Island. We were probably related, and when they visited they would speak in The Gaelic which had been their language-of-thehome Downeast, Grace Collinson. the Provincetown Portuguese historian says that the Herring Chokers, as the Cape Breton Islanders were called for their fondness of that fish were very circumspective about speaking their native language around Sassenachs. "This is probably due to the low opinion which English-speakers had for that ancient language over the generations," Grace says, "but with the Portuguese, the Herring Chokers felt more at ease." "Unlike English," Greace continued," Gaelic lacked nouns with Latin roots so Portuguese-speakers found it completely befuddling. To them it was like a language from Mars!"

In 1865 the population of the town was 3475 which was more than 15% of the total population the Cape. Most were descendants of the original English settlers, called Yankees, but change was obviously taking place. The Irish were the first foreign immigrants to arrive in significant numbers and there were 116 here at that time. Cape Breton Islanders (and a few Nova Scotians who were generally not of boomed economically after the Civil War and ethic changes continued. At the beginning there was a shortage of Portuguese women and that fact certainly had a bearing on the out-of-ethic-group marriages but the pattern was set and it continued.

Early marriages tended to follow religious lines. The Portuguese were always predominantly Roman Scottish origin) numbered 185. Portuguese immigrants, who were from the Azores almost without exception consisted of 245 people. So, at that time there were actually more newcomers of Celtic origin than Portuguese—a situation that changed about 20 years later as the men in the former group tended to leave in a quest for greener pastures.

In 1865 seven Azorean men were married to Irish women, one to a Cape Breton women, and that was an early date indeed. Provincetown Catholic, like the Irish but where were exceptions. Several Portuguese were wed in the Methodist churches here around the time of the Civil War. Prominent Irishman, Hugh Cavanagh, the father of long time teacher Sarah J. Cavanagh, was a Universalist. The Cape Breton Islanders were the only significantly mixed group. Most were Protestant and tended to become Methodists here but there were a number of Roman Catholics. Among them was Philip M.

Campbell, a physician and surgeon whose early office and residence was in the building on Bradford Street opposite the end of Central Street. Today in Provincetown Mayflower descendants are most readily found in those families with Portuguese surnames!

A few words abut Capt. Corea's boat. The Lear C. was built for him in 1901. She was one of the last of her kind built because starting around 1905 there was a rather sudden and remarkable technological change: Fishing craft in New England were converted to engine-powered vessels due to the availability of inexpensive and reliable internal combustion engines.

There is confusing information about the site of the Lear C.'s birth, (it is either Gloucester or Kennebunkport, ME), but sloopboats as they were called were very popular with Provincetown fishermen from about 1880 to 1905. This was particularly so among the Portuguese and frequently a sloopboat would be the first vessel of significant size that they would own. Due to the power of their single large sails and the generosity of their broad decks they became ideal for dragging. Dan Mullins, a fish buyer in New Bedford at the turn-of-the-century claimed that dragging, as distinct from beam trawling, was devised by Portuguese fishermen here and the sloop-boats were obviously part of the reason.

The most versatile sloop-boats tended to have been built in Gloucester by John and Hugh Bishop. Most were 40 to 50 feet long and up to 15 feet in breadth formidable vessels. There were others here including may famed Friendship's, built in Maine.

The Lear C. was also owned by Capt. Joseph Roberts, the father of Margaret Roberts of Center Street. I have a sad photograph of my father's uncle's Gloucester sloopboat, the Pearl docked at Railroad Wharf missing her bowsprit and mast top after was engine-powered.

There is a beautifully executed model of the Gloucester sloop-boat Laura Enos at the Providence (RI) Public Library.

None of the original Gloucester sloop-boats still exist which is reminiscent of another tragedy that is playing out at this moment. For the past several years the trap boat Charlotte, which is owned by the town if Provincetown has been rotting away behind the Heritage Museum. It is the last of its kind in the world and is strongly associated with the Portuguese here. If you think that the preservation movement which has developed so nicely all over the world in the past several decades has touched Provincetown - think again.

A few words abut Capt. Corea's boat. The Lear C. was built for him in 1901. She was one of the last of her kind built because starting around 1905 there was a rather sudden and remarkable technological change: Fishing craft in New England were converted to engine-powered vessels due to the availability of inexpensive and reliable internal combustion engines.

There is confusing information about the site of the Lear C.'s birth. (it is either Gloucester or Kennebunkport, ME), but sloopboats as they were called were very popular with Provincetown fishermen from about 1880 to 1905. This was particularly so among the Portuguese and frequently a sloopboat would be the first vessel of significant size that they would own. Due to the power of their single large sails and the generosity of their broad decks they became ideal for dragging. Dan Mullins, a fish buyer in New Bedford at the turn-of-the-century claimed that dragging, as distinct from beam trawling, was devised by Portuguese fishermen here and the sloop-boats were obviously part of the reason.

The most versatile sloop-boats tended to have been built in Gloucester by John and Hugh Bishop. Most were 40 to 50 feet long and up to 15 feet in breadth-formidable vessels. There were others here including may famed Friendship's, built in Maine.

The Lear C. was also owned by Capt. Joseph Roberts, the father of Margaret Roberts of Center Street. I have a sad photograph of my father's uncle's Gloucester sloopboat, the Pearl docked at Railroad Wharf missing her bowsprit and mast top after was engine-powered.

There is a beautifully executed model of the Gloucester sloop-boat Laura Enos at the Providence (RI) Public Library.

None of the original Gloucester sloop-boats still exist which is reminiscent of another tragedy that is playing out at this moment. For the past several years the trap boat Charlotte, which is owned by the town if Provincetown has been rotting away behind the Heritage Museum. It is the last of its kind in the world and is strongly associated with the Portuguese here. If you think that the preservation movement which has developed so nicely all over the world in the past several decades has touched Provincetown - think again.

The Portuguese in Provincetown

by Betty Costa

Portuguese fishermen that makes them masters of their craft? There are a number of reasons. The seaside location of Portugal and the Azorean Islands lends itself to maritime endeavors. Of more importance, perhaps, is the makeup of the individuals.

Reading about the early immigrants, one comes across a recurrent theme. These were industrious, committed, serious men. Although at first they were crew members, before long they became boat owners and home owners. They brought family members here as soon as they were able to, and the Portuguese community grew.

The makeup of the early settlers varied greatly. The people of northern Portugal often had fair hair and blue eyes reflecting a Germanic strain, while those in the south were more apt to mirror the characteristics of the part of Europe thought of as Latin. The islanders, certainly, had the blood of many cultures in their veins as many travelers who stopped there, often stayed and married Azoreans.

The stories of the Portuguese who settled in Provincetown vary greatly from those of people who settled in other locations. Young men were expected to follow in their fathers' footsteps and go into fishing, or, in some areas, millwork. Young girls traditionally married and raised families.

In Provincetown there seemed to be a broader view. Although fishing would continue to be of prime importance, young people were encouraged to follow their own visions and to pursue the education necessary to fulfill them. Consequently, the early years of this century saw the children of the early immigrants going off to college. Soon the fields of medicine, dentistry, law, education, engineering, and the armed services had on their rosters the names of second generation Portuguese. Aspiring fishermen studied at the University of Rhode Island and at Cape Cod Technical High School to learn and fine tune the ever changing craft that is fishing.

Why the difference between Provincetown and other areas? The simplest answer is that in the earliest years, summertime brought a group of artists and writers from New York. These visitors, many of whom bought property here did not isolate themselves from the Portuguese community.

Indeed, There is much evidence that a great deal of interaction took place. Charles Hawthorne used Portuguese fishermen and local children as models for his paintings as did others.

Then, as now, Provincetown was an open, accepting, cosmopolitan place. Locals mingled with visitors and the result was a greater understanding of both cultures.

In his Cape Cod Cookbook, artist Peter Hunt speaks fondly of the Portuguese and includes their recipes learned from friends and neighbors.

Recently, there has been a renewed interest in the Portuguese and their contributions to the town. The spirit and courage that enabled mariners to discover so much of the world is a source of great pride.

The first annual Portuguese Festival will provide an opportunity for all to learn about and appreciate the heritage that is such a vital part of this community.

THIRTY LIVES LOST

Grand Banks Fisherman Cora S. McKay Went Down in a Hurricane.

SHE HAILED FROM PROVINCETOWN.

Provincetown, Mass., Dec. 7.—The Grand Banks fisherman Cora S. McKay has been lost at sea with her crew of 29 sailors and a boy. Of those lost, all but nine hailed from this town. Among the relatives, there are 15 widows and 54 children. The McKay was probably lost soon after Sept. 12, in the same storm which wrecked the Provincetown schooner Willie A. McKay, the crew of which, excepting one sailor, were rescued, The Cora S. McKay, was considered one of the best of the fleet sailing out of this port.

The Cora S. McKay sailed from here last May with one of the best fishing crews ever gotten together on the deck of a Provincetown fisherman. Her master was Roderick Matheson. The crew were mostly from here, only nine claiming residence in other towns, these latter being Scotchmen or Frenchmen, The others, save the cook and his son, who were Germans, were Portuguese by birth.

The vessel went to Quero bank for cod, but from time to time came word that the catch was a disappointment. The McKay then sailed to the Virgin rocks, and to her crew list were added Fred Baker and Neil McLean, from the Bucksport schooner T.M. Nicholson, which had a full fare and was leaving for home. Fishing on the "rocks" proved but little better than that experienced on Quero, and it became apparent that the voyage must far beyond the usual limit in order to acquire a full load of cod. The craft had taken about 5000 quintals, and required nearly 2000 quintals more to finish lading, on the morning of Sept. 12.

On the evening of that day, a destructive gale came down upon the anchored Grand Bank fleet. The McKay has not been seen since that gale. The supposition is that she foundered at that time.

When the Provincetown fleet began to return and reported the probable disaster to the Cora S. McKay the whole town felt once again the hand of death, a visitor who has called in nearly every home here.

It is not know here whether the out of town men were married, but 15 widows and 54 orphans have been added to the already long list of the town.

The Cora S. McKay was a three masted craft, built at Essex in 1888 for the Grand Banks handline fishery. She measured 198 gross tons, was a splendid sea boat, and was regarded as the best vessel sailing from this port.

All hopes of the safety of the McKay was abandoned by local fishermen some time ago. The last heard of the craft was when she went adrift in that terrible gale with the sch. Talisman of this port.

The list of the men are as follows:

Roderick W, Matheson, master, married, two children; Manuel Thomas, mate, 35, married, six children; H.P. Jansen, cook, 48, married, four children; Joe Velon, 28, married, three children; Luther Jansen, 13; Antoine L Prada, 19, single; Joe Days, 33, married, five children: Manuel Silva, 19, single; William Bent, 22, single; John Sousa, 25, married, one child; Marion Prada, 31, married, four children; John Williams, 45, married, one child; Peter Sousa, 38 married, six children; Joe Bent, 2d, 35, married, six children; Joseph Enos, 20, married, one child; Samuel Sents, 20, single; Manuel Costa, 40, married, three children; Manuel Valentine, 40, married, three children; Manuel Valentine, (son) 22, single; Joseph Dantes (or Charles) 36, married, six children; Alex Lawrence, William Miller, Alfred Landry, Simon Goyceha, Benjamin Sampson, Frank Mombouquette, Thomas Middleton, Fred Baker and Neil McLean.

his event was made possible by the generous support of the Provincetown business community. Many thanks to our benefactors: The Advocate, The Banner, Benson Young & Downs, Seamen's Bank, The Provincetown Lions Club and the Holiday Inn and Breakwater Motel. Also, a big thank you to our patrons: Dolphin Whale Watch and Lands End Marine. Please let these businesses know that you appreciate their efforts as well as the efforts of our sponsors, supporters and contributors.

At the risk of leaving someone out, there are people that have gone above and beyond to make this event a reality: first, Rose Steele who not only attended meetings and helped produce this book but put the full weight and effort of her family business, The Advocate, behind this endeavor. Thank you to Rose and the entire Steele family; Paul Seeley who took charge of our parade and, we are sure, will rival the glorious parades of the past; Mary-Jo Avellar for taking charge of producing our first ever Portuguese Cookbook and visiting Washington, DC, to personally invite the Portuguese Embassy delegates; Helen Addison of Addison & Associates whose countless hours of volunteered time and professional support gave the festival life through her imagination and timeless attention to detail; Cathy Cook, our St. Peter's connection, who was always there and did whatever she was asked; Lenny Enos and the Enos Family for their support and use of their facilities for our fund-raisers; David Condon our chef and function coordinator: Betty Costa and Andi Gulan who attended countless meetings and helped tremendously in producing this 50th commemorative book; Mick Rudd and Ewa Nogiec at Shank Painter Company for their patience and persistence on our many printing projects; Leo Morris for his steadfast support and continuos help with our raffles; Lori Meads for coordinating our merchandising; Michael Silva for coordinating our Trip to Portugal Raffle; Maggie at Provincetown Florist for her generous support; Ron Robin at The Mews and the Provincetown Municipal Advertising Committee for their support and for holding the meeting, "Let's Be More Than Summer

Friends," where the festival idea was first sponsored; Ron, thanks also for the use of The Mews, the help on the decoration and for your efforts to bring the town together to support this First Annual Provincetown Portuguese Festival; Erma & Kurt Ruckstuhl for her ideas and help on the Portuguese soup competition; Joy McNulty, Steve Roderick and the McNulty Family for their unwavering support and for keeping the Blessing tradition alive to reach this 50th celebration. Others whose support have made our efforts easier: Candy Collins-Boden of The Chamber of Commerce. The Patricks of Marine Specialties, Fred Jones of Sun Signs, and on and on. A big thanks to my brother, Paul Silva, for allowing me the time to work on the festival and for assuming the duties of treasurer to keep us fiscally sound. And another big thanks to the People of Provincetown, the Selectmen and to Keith Bergman, our Town Manager, for all their help.
